

S&P 500 Index March 9, 2009 – March 31, 2021

Market corrections are normal. However, because of the Great Recession of 2008-2009, every downturn—big or small—feels like the next “Great Disaster.” History has shown us that corrections are part of a healthy, thriving market environment.

There were 25 corrections of 5-20% during the secular bull market of 1982 – 2000, and one correction that was greater than 20%. Still, the long-term trend kept moving upward steadily. At the end of that secular bull market, the S&P 500 Index had grown 1363%. From the March 2009 lows through March 2021, the market saw 23 corrections of 5% or more. Even with those corrections, the long-term trend has remained strong and the S&P 500 Index earned 652% for the period.
